Vanguard Properties Opens “Pop Up” Real Estate Office in San Francisco

Castro Office Reimagined to Reflect Culture & Community

San Francisco, California | May 15, 2015

Vanguard Properties, always at the forefront of innovation in real estate marketing and design, has opened its first “pop-up” office at 541 Castro Street in San Francisco. The sleek new space will serve as the temporary home of Vanguard’s Castro office while its permanent location – just three doors away at 555 Castro Street – is reimagined, remodeled and reengineered into a more beautiful and efficient state-of-the-art real estate office.

Rohan, Wallace & Aherne Builders is overseeing the remodel, and completion is expected by late summer of this year.

The pop-up office, once home to the popular Under One Roof store, has been transformed into an industrial loft-style space equipped with Herman Miller chairs, open conference area, sleek worktables, and ultra modern LED lighting.

Vanguard Properties is known for its fresh and exciting approach to buying and selling Real Estate, and the design of its offices – located in San Francisco, Marin and Sonoma counties, and in Palm Springs – are a dramatic departure from traditional real estate work environments.

While each office is unique, they are all extensions of Vanguard's culture of style, sophistication and community. Instead of isolating walls and barriers, Vanguard utilizes abundant glass and natural light to create open vistas. Inviting reception areas encourage socializing, open work zones foster collaboration, and contemporary yet personal designs reflect Vanguard's commitment to creating a difference in its clients' real estate experiences.
